The Levant: A Crossroads of Civilizations

The Levant has been a crossroads of civilizations for millennia, and its archaeological record reflects the diverse cultures and peoples that have inhabited the region. The earliest evidence of human activity in the Levant dates back to the Lower Paleolithic period, and includes stone tools and animal bones found in caves and rock shelters. During the Neolithic period, the Levant was home to a number of important agricultural communities, including Jericho, one of the oldest continuously inhabited cities in the world. The Bronze Age saw the rise of urban centers and the development of complex political and economic systems in the Levant, while the Iron Age witnessed the emergence of powerful kingdoms and empires, such as the Philistines, Israelites, and Assyrians.
